Dear reader, while you are here, please consider sharing your thoughts in the comments section. THE ECONOMY I am of two minds about the United States Congress. On one hand, I am aghast at their gross and criminal dereliction of duty. The answers they gave to most of the questions they asked Katrina survivors were ghastly. No one should have expected better. They had the chance to ask difficult questions, but they chose the easy ones. "What did Bush know and when did he know it?" was the easy one. "How can I support you and your family?" is the hard one. But the questions were easy. But on the other hand, we have to see the Republicans in Congress as victims too. The Democrats are at least able to construe their situation in positive terms. The Republicans, facing a virtually unpredicted, historic hurricane, were caught with their pants down. Incompetence was the only conclusion one could reach. But the Republicans didn't blow the hurricane. They didn't even hear it. We didn't even know they were being denied the opportunity to ask hard questions. It's hard to see how they "failed to act" until it was too late. I don't know what it will take for the country to realize that, like the Democrats, they too were victims. But as long as they can make the impossible claim of innocence, they will not be considered culpable. ON THE WEB You

International catalogue In communication and media studies, the international catalogue is a document of publications and research results on a specific field of knowledge (such as communication) produced by academics of universities and research institutions outside the country where the institution is located. In many cases the creation of such a catalogue is a mandate of the institution and it comprises both the catalogued publications and the institution's own outputs. The international catalogue contains articles which are not (or not only) included in the domestic or regional catalogues. These cover subjects which are the core of the institution's research or they are of interest to all the institutions that are part of the international communication network. International catalogues, usually produced by editorial offices, are also known as international research catalogues. The main goal of the publication is to create an overview of the research output of institutions that are a part of the communication network, and to offer these research results to anybody interested in a particular field. Therefore, the scope of an international catalogue may be broader than that of a domestic catalogue, which may focus on subjects that are often of local importance, but are less interesting for the rest of the world, such as local publishing houses.
