S.).Dr. Marilou Doucette, a former doctor at Massachusetts General Hospital and Brigham and Women's Hospital, has become a central figure in the story of the relationship between Dr. William Jackson, the former head of MGH and Brigham and Women's, and President Donald Trump. Doucette, a 68-year-old cancer specialist, left MGH and Brigham and Women's in 2018 after she was accused of stalking and harassing Jackson. Doucette, who moved to Florida after her charges were made public, was part of a much larger group of doctors who have been booted from their jobs since Jackson's ouster last year. The former MGH and Brigham and Women's Hospital president, William Jackson, was forced out of the hospitals in 2018 amid a barrage of negative news stories about him and the hospitals. In 2019, the hospitals hired a new president, Toni Choueiri, despite an investigation from the state Attorney General that concluded Jackson had engaged in sexual harassment and had aided in the firing of a former employee who accused him of sexual misconduct. Doucette said she was unable to get a job in either hospital. She took to Google for help. The news website Boston.com reported that she was one of many doctors who put up job ads on Google in an effort to see what was available. The top result was an ad posted by the hospitals, including MGH and Brigham 570a42141b
