Hypereosinophilic syndrome in childhood: pathophysiology, clinical presentation and prognosis. Hypereosinophilic syndrome is a rare hematological disorder occurring in both children and adults with an aggressive clinical course. Pathogenesis of disease is complex and involves genetic factors as well as the environment. The clinical presentation includes a wide variety of skin and organ-based symptoms. Surgery for the underlying disease is the most common definitive treatment. Although definitive treatment for the hematological component of disease is often required, its resolution has been uncommonly reported. Novel treatments directed towards genetic abnormalities have proved to be effective in some patients. He is a far cry from his charisma-free predecessor, David Cameron, and where once the prime minister talked about "change, choice and competition", Mr Johnson now boasts that "we are at the end of the line". Not so. There is more to this episode than a loss of leadership. Far more. I have spoken to and met many Conservative MPs over the years who will admire Boris Johnson as a politician. Others have harboured enmity for his political rise which has, at times, felt personal. The next few days will be dominated by the fate of Theresa May. The Conservatives' civil war will intensify. But from Tuesday, it will be Parliament doing the talking. Mr Johnson's eye for manipulating events is already in evidence. He has been talking up a vote of no confidence in Mrs May and has been orchestrating a rebellion by Tory MPs. He has been a jack-of-all-trades, as his former job of mayor of London proved, with his background in journalism and public relations which has helped him to be a populist. It is certainly a party of "disrupters" – described as a political force which disrupts "the status quo". The Conservatives see their task as ensuring that Mrs May keeps the election date of 8 June. But Mr Johnson's strategy was to use his party colleagues' rebelliousness to delay the campaign. Now he is faced with a crisis in his own party. Wednesday, September 3, 2015 It's Monday and I'm tired About a year ago I made a big change, getting out of my comfort zone. I had been freelancing part time for about 10 years, and was doing well for myself, I had my own car, paid taxes, rent, and a mortgage. Then I had a huge, life changing, traumatic experience. My mother, 80 years old, had a stroke and there was nothing they could do about it. I lost her. She was a wonderful person, but did not live with the idea that she would live beyond 60. She ended up dying of lung cancer at 65. I was devastated. My whole world came crashing down. That's pretty bad shit. But it was what it was and I had to deal with it. I was finally forced to come to terms with the fact that I was never going to have children, that I was not going to be married, and that I was going to have to live the rest of my life alone. It took me about a year to get my life back on track. I started to try to work through some of the issues that I was dealing with. But I know that a lot of people never recover from something like this. The people who went through what I did say that they thought things would get better when they were out of the shock, but there was no real improvement. That was about a year ago. Now, I'm getting to a place where I can recognize what I have to do in order to achieve the life that I want to live. I'm working more hours, I'm working on a contract basis in a positive, cooperative environment. I'm saving for retirement and putting my house back on the market. I'm also trying to stop blaming myself, I'm not to blame for the fact that my mother had a stroke. I don't have to feel guilty about what happened. I just have to learn how to deal with it. I'm planning on doing this for the rest of my life, and I'm okay with that. I'm doing what I had to do to survive, and it has made a huge difference in my life, I just have to keep moving forward and not look back. Wait, does that mean you can own a dog on the Moon? On the surface of the Moon, at least. The Japanese space agency J
