John II Kammergård John II Kammergård or Kammergården (John the Carpenter, c. 1495–1552) was a Danish prince, the eldest son of Queen Margaret I of Denmark, the last of the Kalmar Union monarchs and Norway's King Christian II's first consort. Biography Born in 1495, he was the son of Danish Queen Margaret I of Denmark, who reigned as queen of Denmark, Norway and Sweden from 1513 to 1523, and Norway's King Christian II. The Ottomans conquered Sigurd II of Norway in 1535. Neither his mother nor his sister, Sophia of Denmark and Norway, could, however, be successful in their efforts to overthrow the Ottomans and restore their son to the Norwegian throne. Instead of restoring Sigurd II's dominions to him, King Christian II renewed the estate for his own descendants until the 1848 Aftterklingerexpansion. As a result, his son John Kammergård was born and died a Norwegian prince, and his mother never set foot in Norway again. As John II had already married, his brother to the daughter of the German King Frederick I, in 1539, he succeeded his brother as the Head of the House of Oldenburg. Marriage and issue John II married in Rantzau in 1539 to Elisabeth von Holstein-Plön (died 1566), a daughter of the German king Frederick I. She was a sister of his first cousin, the Swedish king Gustavus Adolphus and of the Danish king Christian II. John II had five children with Elisabeth: Sigurd Kammergård af Rantzau (died 1584), his successor as King of Norway. Christoffer Kammergård af Rantzau (1544–1585), his successor as King of Norway. Elisabeth Kammergård af Rantzau (born 1546), his successor as Queen of Denmark. Kirstine Kammergård af Rantzau (born 1550), his successor as Queen of Norway. Ulrike Kammergård af Rantzau (born 1552), his successor as Queen of Norway, wife of the Danish king Frederick II. Ancestors Sources List of Norwegian monarchs Category:1490s births

Making or buying a mitt for my "new boy" - cannot get him to wear them My new boy is a "free ranging" dog and doesnt tolerate being held. He loves to run around, eat, and play. He also enjoys laying out of the sun and is a very heavy dog. I currently have two mitts - one for him and one for a smaller dog. The larger dog wears them for a short period of time, then puts them on and lets them soak. His seems to work just fine, but he does not enjoy wearing them and is very uncomfortable. I do not want to buy a third one as we have two dogs. Any ideas on how to get my boy wearing a mitt? Comments Our first few days at adult dog about 2 months were spent walking together through snow and ice. The problem was the same - the poor girl couldn't wear any mitts and was really cold - I had to carry her the whole time. I bought some cheap "tissue" pads for her feet and that really helped. We always wore mittens when out with him and if it was cold he'd wear mine or Alex's but he's older now so we go out less and less and he just lays with his feet under the covers in winter.Q: C# - Updating a property of derived class through a base class I've got 3 classes as following : public class BaseEntity { public int Id { get; set; } } public class DerivedEntity : BaseEntity { public int Amount { get; set; } } public class Loan : DerivedEntity { public decimal Interest { get; set; } } Loan is an entity that have a property amount, and in DerivedEntity I want this property to be calculated and have a particular value. If I write a method that do the base calculation when constructing, the Amount property will be set to 0, because the Derived is not yet created. `public void Construct() { Amount = GetAmount(); }` This is not a good way, and I think that is possible to have the Amount property set a different value, depending on its parent. How can I achieve that? Thanks, A: It's possible
