AnyTV Pro is a tool that lets you view TV channels and listen to radio online, from all over the world. The program sports a standard interface, few features, and the integrated toolbar contains TV, Radio, Video, Favorites, Update, and Add. So, you can view TV channels, radio stations and video clips, by filtering them according to country. Besides the name of the channel, the queue list contains information for the genre, rating, bitrate and comments (but not on the country, surprisingly enough). In addition, you can rate and flag channels, search for a specific one, filter according to file name, genre, bitrate and flagged channels, create a favorites list, adjust volume, and switch to full screen mode. In order to update the daily channels list, you have to purchase the full product. Also, not all the channels are available in the free version (actually, we could only access a small part of them). Sometimes, the program does not recognize extensions, the image quality varies from channel to channel, and there is no user guide you can view. We have found another interesting fact: double-click a channel and it may work fine; but if you right-click it and select Watch / Listen, anyTV informs you that the trial version has expired (even if you're using it in the first day). Overall, anyTV uses a moderate amount of system resources, and is seamless to use by both beginners and experts. Test it for yourself. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration on Friday set new import restrictions on some Chinese products that could help protect consumers from contaminated food, and has begun a campaign to inform them of the dangers of buying products from China. The regulations, which take effect in 15 days, mark the first measures by the FDA to try to restrict imports of food and drugs from China, where tainted products have sickened thousands of Americans. At least 16 people have died and hundreds more have become sick with a fatal strain of E. coli in recent years from partially or fully cooked meats from China. The most recent outbreak, which began in August, originated at the restaurant chain Jack in the Box, based in Santa Monica, Calif. A dozen customers became sick and one person died before the outbreak was traced to the company's meat suppliers. Story continues below advertisement The FDA's new rules will apply to almost all products produced in China, including meat, fruits, vegetables and seafood. Products will

They do not mark the video to slow it down to a normal speed. 2 of 2 people found this review helpful Kathy N/A 12/10/13 Free version is ok The Free version works fine, however, it doesn't show all the countries channels are available in and the free version is not updated. The price for the Pro version is $15. I think that they should include more countries with channels that are available in their paid version. 1 of 1 people found this review helpful Report Inappropriate Content If you find this review inappropriate and think it should be removed from our site, let us know.
