Soluble CD14 levels and coronary artery disease in elderly hypertensives. The role of the innate immune system in the pathophysiology of atherosclerosis is becoming increasingly important. One key player of the innate immune system is the surface molecule CD14. Its soluble form (sCD14) is associated with inflammatory reactions and increased risk of cardiovascular events. The aim of our study was to assess sCD14 levels in patients with coronary artery disease (CAD) and untreated elderly hypertensive patients. We evaluated soluble CD14 levels in the serum and plasma of 120 CAD patients and 52 hypertensive patients ( $\geq 65$  years of age). Subsequently, the association between sCD14 levels and CAD in hypertensive patients was analyzed. sCD14 levels were not different in CAD patients and healthy controls. However, the CAD group had significantly elevated sCD14 levels (p The East Asian monsoon is the dry season trade wind from China that blows into South Korea and Japan.
