When putting together a program for a machine learning competition, there are several things that you should keep in mind. Using an open source project or a closed-source, commercial package is much easier than developing your own. Regardless of which route you choose, you should focus on providing the best learning curve and make your user experience as user-friendly as possible. In this article, we're going to walk you through the process of developing a machine learning solution. Identify the problem Before you begin developing a piece of software, you should be able to identify the problem your users are trying to solve. If you can't, you can't hope to solve it. Therefore, it is imperative to understand your problem well. That is, know what you're trying to solve so you'll know how to approach the problem. For example, a developer trying to build a basic computer vision algorithm might not know what an algorithm is. By knowing your problem, you'll know what training data you'll need, how many parameters your solutions require, and what machine learning algorithm(s) you'll need to employ. Develop testing criteria Now that you know what you're trying to solve, you'll need to find the right data and testing setup to understand whether your solution is actually solving the problem. In some cases, the problem you are trying to solve is so small that you can simply come up with some 09e8f5149f

Zoomava functionsQ: Select queryset for external file using forms.ModelChoiceField I have a Django application that uses a model from one app and a model from another. I am using a forms.ModelChoiceField to collect the appropriate model. It looks like this: import PurchaseContract # elsewhere in my model.py... class Person(models.Model): name = models.CharField(max_length=250, blank=True) contacts = models.ManyToManyField(Contact, blank=True) # elsewhere in my forms.py... class PersonForm(forms.ModelForm): def __init__(self, *args, kwargs): super(PersonForm, self).__init__(*args, kwargs) self.fields['contacts'] = forms.ModelChoiceField(label='Some label', queryset=PurchaseContract.Person.objects.all()) So when I go to the page with the PersonForm it displays the dropdown that I want, but I can't figure out how to populate it. Normally when I fill out a ModelForm I can just iterate through choices and get the values out of that like: for choice in self.fields['contacts']: print choice.label But I can't for the life of me get that part to work when using a ModelChoiceField. A: Maybe its already the case, but I still wanted to point this out. One approach that worked for me is calling the set_queryset() method on the form while the forms are being validated. So basically, I put this in the form's __init__(): def __init__(self, *args, kwargs): super(PersonForm, self).__init__(*args, kwargs)
