According to him, "CEOs who hid their assets and destroyed their companies" did so because "their crimes were all based on one central lie: that these executives were responsible for everyone else's mess." Taibbi even made the claim that "CEOs did not commit crimes as such, except by definition." As the following quotations from Taibbi show, he errs in defining and committing crimes, and he misstates the nature of corporate governance.

In 2010, Taibbi wrote in Rolling Stone that fraudulent CEOs and management at companies like Lehman Brothers and AIG faced no personal criminal prosecution. He seemed to be referring to the fact that while Richard Fuld, CEO of Lehman Brothers and Dick Fuld, CEO of A a1d647c40b
