It's been more than two years since I was in London. And it seems as if it all happened not long ago. And time flies so fast in this city that is foreign to me! It was my first job in London. I got a job as a manager in a small travel agency. The work was not dusty. Mostly dealing with clients. I was quite happy with that. And I was all right with the language. I had to learn it. In London and in England, in principle, it is very easy. I didn't like that it was so small, and then when we came to New York, I realized it was okay. In London it was very laid-back, all this "we have this way of doing things here" and "we're so comfortable" and "what's the big deal?" Here, on the contrary, people are very noisy. I wouldn't say that in London people are too noisy, but in New York they just yell when they want to talk to you. They're also very noisy in airports. Actually, I've never been to London and I've been to New York once.
