In the experiments on anesthetized rats it was shown that after activation of the lateral hypothalamus and hypotension the norepinephrine output increases by more than 50% as compared to the control level. The effect is blocked by the bilateral microinjection of H_2O_2 in the medial preoptic area and by the intraperitoneal administration of dopamine beta-hydroxylase inhibitor. These data support a hypothesis of the involvement of oxygen peroxidation of dopamine beta-hydroxylase in the control of norepinephrine release. The addition of catalase into the microinjection medium or repeated injections of catalase decrease the norepinephrine output after the hypothalamic stimulation, as well as the hypertension. The effect of catalase is blocked by the co-microinjection of antimycin A which indicated the participation of mitochondria in the catalase effect.In a move sure to disturb to bakers who fear what would happen if they refused to bake a wedding cake for same-sex couples, the Supreme Court on Friday ruled 5-4 that the Colorado Civil Rights Commission violated the state's constitution when it ordered a bakery to bake a cake for a same-sex marriage. From what we've experienced of the game so far, the game seems like it can be really fun and it's not a bad game at all. If you want to learn more about Elden Ring, I think you'll want to read some reviews before you decide if you want to buy it. I'm already excited to play it. Andrew Dominguez of IncGamers review: The combat system is very fast-paced, but it also leaves much room for players to get creative in terms of set-ups and you can switch from one character to another depending on what situation you're in. The character creation system allows you to build your own heroes, so you can choose from various races such as humans and orcs. Andrew Dominguez from INCGAMER'S REVIEW: I think a lot of gamers and fantasy role-playing game fans are intrigued by the sort of style and concept that Archiact is coming up with. And I think that's why we all got excited when we heard about Elden Ring. As the game is still a work in progress, it's nice to see that it looks like the developers are giving the fans plenty of opportunities to interact and show the developers what they think should be added to the game or fixed. It's a new take on the RPG experience, and it's definitely worth checking out as it's shaping up to be an enjoyable experience. What's new:

The story unfolds based on the different styles of play and character classes you select. This is a game in which a network of layers interconnects the online play, character creation, and world map, all of which are used in combination to support the adventure. You are playing a girl known as Grace, who is raised by a single mother. In the game, the story unfolds in three different styles of play, known as "drama arcs," to emphasize the varying styles of action, adventure, and investigation. As you go along the drama arcs, the various thoughts of the characters intersect, and players can enter this world of rich complexity through the online element (i.e., elements such as the world map, character information, and purchase and sell items). This makes for a unique RPG that plays very well both online and offline. The online game gradually expands to all of the Lands Between, and with every game, the story and the characters will develop. The adventurers that gathered in Ravenlock City for the past events will act as the core of the online game.

My problem is: I want to define a simple rule that for a given list of numbers say x and vector v, allows me to generate a list of 0 and 1's to give a value of foo(x,v). But the only way I can think of doing this is by using numpy.where() over a list of 0's and 1's which is a really ugly way to do this. Any better way to do this? e.g. Suppose the function foo is def foo(x): return x2 Then to test some of the cases I would do something like def test(x,v): res=np.where(v==0) out=(res==[True,False]) return foo(x) * 2 Of course I could use a different rule, for example def foo(x): return max(x) - min(x) Then, in order to use the defined rule I would do this def test(x,v): res=np.where(v==0) out=(res==[True,False]) return max(x) - min(x) * 2 Is there any way to do what I want to do in the first example? A: The original problem you list is purely mathematical and has a fairly straightforward solution. Here is a minimal example with numpy.linspace to make the example understandable: In [71]: import numpy
