We have recently shown that polyphenolic green tea constituent, epigallocatechin-3-gallate (EGCG), exerts proapoptotic and anti-angiogenic effects by inhibiting Ras-MAPK cascade. Here, we show that EGCG inhibits the proliferation of SW480 colon cancer cells and causes induction of apoptosis and inhibition of angiogenesis in this cell line. We demonstrate that EGCG causes down-regulation of phosphorylation of the MAPK signal transduction proteins: ERK, JNK and p38. EGCG-induced apoptosis was associated with the upregulation of the proapoptotic protein Bax. We also found that the effect of EGCG on the MAPK proteins was not dependent on the presence of serum in the cell cultures. Furthermore, using luciferase reporter assay, we found that EGCG, at low micromolar concentrations, was able to inhibit TNF-α-induced NF-κB signaling in SW480 cells. We show that EGCG enhances NF-κB-dependent transcription in SW480 cells. Using the pharmacological inhibitor of IκB-α phosphorylation, we demonstrate that NF-

Weibo review: Gamezone Chinese review: Report / Contact / Support / Ways to play the ELDEN RING. www.facebook.com/EIringRPG www.twitter.com/EIringGame Eric Marker is a freelance writer who lives in Wales. In the first week of February, China announced that it would begin its first-ever space station, which will be the first ever constructed by a non-Western nation. Like other announced space stations — Russia's Orel, Japan's Kibo, Germany's Columbus — the Tiangong-1 has a name and a rough outline of how it will work. However, it's also starting to take shape. It will have two docking ports, which will be used to grab a new module and then be attached to it. And it'll be the first space station to move—the two modules will dangle side-by-side before being grappled and connected. And that's why this is so significant. To understand how exciting this is for China, look no further than the Phobos-Grunt probe — the country's first attempt to send a lander to Mars. It's a hefty 745 kilos, a little heavier than a compact car. And it's by far the biggest payload China has ever sent to Mars. It's first step, though a giant leap for China. China's a nation of a billion, and its space program's also massive. It was the first country ever to put a satellite into orbit. Since then, it's made more than 500 satellites and launched nearly 20,000 rockets of various sizes. Still, it's a nascent, baby step space program. So you'd think it'd be a little disconcerted by the idea of making the first-ever space station. But China's project manager — also known as “chief designer” — for the Tiangong-1, bff6bb2d33
