Jump to interactive: This one seems obvious, but it's good to know nonetheless. This is a 3v3 match between Persson's men and Primeira Liga side Rio Ave and it's a highlight reel of the game. As you see Persson go in for the quick free kick it is the first time you get a sense that everything is happening in real time. This is a shot from the Beta version of the game. There are a number of examples of this in the beta, but this one shows how the animation is so smooth, and how even the realistic physics and animation work so well. FIFA 18 introduced the "Play Now" button which allows you to play various real-life matches, with a variety of match lengths. Starting out with a short match, you are then offered a duration that will get you right into it. I've put all of these short games into this youtube playlist so you can watch them as you play FIFA if you want. As well as this, there is the "Reproduce the Stadium" function. This allows you to select "Virtual Stadium" and "Local Stadium," and then you can choose which teams are playing and where you want them to be located. You can choose from home, away and neutral stadiums, and each one is accurate to the real thing, including the history of the particular stadium. It's worth mentioning that all of the stadiums in real life are tailored to each team, which means that each stadium has a unique feel that even the smallest details give it authenticity. As well as being really excited about this feature, I'm also really looking forward to the "Air VR" mode, which I've heard a bit about and that looks really cool. This game has real-time player animation, and it looks incredible. The ball physics have been improved too, so it feels much tighter and more responsive than ever. Sneaker's article is a really good one. I've read it so I'll only give a brief look at it. FIFA 22 introduces "HyperMotion Technology," which uses motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity
