more Beneficial effects of the Ca²⁺-dependent statin, simvastatin, on dendritic cell function and survival. Dendritic cells (DCs) have significant antitumor effects when administered in immunotherapy protocols. A potential limitation to their use in the clinic is the recognized toxicities associated with the administration of DCs. A related group of compounds, the statins, with their reported anticancer effects are considered to represent a pharmacologic approach for adjuvant therapy of cancer. In this study, we examined the effects of simvastatin on the function and survival of DCs derived from human blood monocytes in vitro. Simvastatin treatment resulted in a dose-dependent inhibition of the secretion of the inflammatory cytokine TNF-alpha as well as TNF receptor 1 (TNFR1) and in an inhibition of TNF-alpha-mediated
