Johnny Boy: Red Moon's Kiss - Episode 1 (April-2022)

Take control of John, a former career criminal with a past of thievery and murder. Upon waking in an unknown hotel, bloodied, injured and having no memory of the last eight years, he struggles to make sense of his own disappearance. Tormenting nightmares and chronic pain overwhelms him, leading him down a path of insanity. You will start with a pistol and will need to work your way up to a machine gun as the game progresses. You will find yourself in a series of situations as you try to figure out the truth behind your disappearance and what happened to the woman you loved so many years ago. Your choices will have consequences and the game will be over if you die. Please note that this is NOT an RPG Maker game, this is a pure role-playing game in the style of 5, 6 or 7. Design: Scenario writing by Forrest L. Ingalls, based on the novel by Scott O'Dell. Audio and Visual Effects by Christopher Black. Original Sound Track by Christopher Black. Storyboards and 2D artwork by me. Models and texturing by Forrest L. Ingalls, based on the original Unreal Engine artworks. Audio by Christopher Black. The art style of the original story "Johnny and the Homewrecker" has been recreated faithfully in this second part of the series for your enjoyment. WARNING: This game is mature, contains adult themes, violence, blood, gore and swearing. It does not contain nudity. In the past few days, John Doe has been changed. His actions are now more evil and his hate for his soon to be ex-wife, Chris, is now a part of his everyday life. Now John is locked in a cage, awaiting the return of Chris and her lawyer, Doug, leaving the future of Johnny and his soul up in the air. ### What's new in Johnny Boy: Red Moon's Kiss - Episode 1:

There were no such things as strangers in Roy Orbison's life, and he had a near perfect family. Whatever happened in the weeks and years that followed, the man he was became the man he needed to be and, for a time, they lived in a perfect cocoon of love and good living. His name was Johnny. He was born a month after his mother's wedding and his father was named Eugene. A happy man, he had several jobs and always played the songs he thought the public would like to hear, even after audiences and critics turned and turned his music to an empty space. In the end he escaped the other sort of theatre, lost in the wasteland of obscurity and on the edge of death. Johnny rose from his bed on the second morning of December, 1948 and made a small jug of water. Then he drank his fill and washed the sleep from his eyes. Looking into the mirror over the fireplace, he saw the hollows beneath his eyes and the grime to his face. He shambled to the chair across the room and lowered himself into it. He had not been eating very well and all his profits from the dusty box office were used for a few bars at the bar and jars of beer. He was relieved at the degree of his hangover and fell immediately into his self-consciousness. He couldn't stand that in himself. First thing he had to do was get up, be it only by ten. Take a shower, brush and set himself up for the day. He was happy with the afternoon sound of his shoes on the floor, followed by the click of locker opening and closing, shirtless trunks, skull and shellac showering. He never made it past that, before three identical boys walked into his life. "Johnny, Johnny, Johnny!" They were whispering in French and one of them was chuckling. "If it isn't the American dream." Three beautiful people in their thirties, all tall and lean and dressed in colorful drapes, moved slowly from their bag and suitcases around Johnny's bed and came to embrace him. They had heard the news, had made their way from the small town and now they would do anything in their power to help him get his life back to what he had before; a small circle of safety. They were gathering up his clothes and setting the trunks aside. These people were in it for the money and in three minutes they had stripped him of his usual face and
