Much of the growth came from clothing and footwear (up 5.0% in July). and department stores (up 5.0% in July). The average price per square foot for department stores increased slightly (0.1%), by the same margin as retailers, but the price per square foot for clothing and footwear increased substantially (up 6.9% in July). Retail spending slowed in June after having maintained moderate growth in May, most likely because of the holiday season. The retail spending rebound continued in July, possibly in part because of the recent rate hikes. Retail sales increased 2.5% in July, the slowest rate of growth since July 2011. From July to August, retailers are likely to carry over some of their inventory. So far, they have been able to find enough customers to buy and process the merchandise. Around the News Blogosphere The Dallas Police Association urged Dallas County District Attorney Craig Watkins to charge the police officers who fatally shot a mentally ill young man at North Central Expressway and Main Street. The police officers are claiming that it was an accident and that the 22-year-old was reaching for a gun when he died.
