Q: How can I set the frontend as my root in Parallels? I'm learning to use the Parallels desktop virtual machine in OS X. (Yes, I've heard of the VM thing now) I'm running it on a Mac with Ubuntu installed as the guest OS. I've already installed many Ubuntu applications on the guest. Now I want to use Safari for Ubuntu, because I'm doing web development on the side. I'm used to opening a browser and typing a address into the address bar. How do I fix this with Parallels? A: I found a way to fix this: Log out of Parallels Click the Parallels icon in the top bar of the OS X desktop Click the Windows icon on the left. Then, you should be asked whether you want to stay in Ubuntu or switch back to OS X. Make sure that you're using your Ubuntu instance, and that it's been online long enough to be the current version. It should say "latest version" on the left side of the Windows icon. Click the Windows icon on the left. Click "Fix Ubuntu Connection" (you may need to hit enter). Now, it should be asking for your Ubuntu credentials, and you should be set to go! Wound Retention and Infection of a Novel Sterile 5-0 Prolene Suture With Silver Implanted Under the Epithelial Layer by Long-Term Skin-Perfusion Fluorescence. To investigate the wound-retention and infection rate of a novel sterile prolene suture with 1.0-mm silver particles placed under the epidermal layer by long-term skin perfusion (LTS) fluorescence. This experiment included 48 rabbits randomized into 4 groups. An excisional circular wound (approximately 1.5 x 0.75 cm) was created in each ear with the same dimensions and was applied to Group A (proline suture with silver particles), Group B (proline suture), Group C (superpolybond), and Group D (no suture). To evaluate the wound-retention rate, the wound was observed every 4 hours for 72 hours. For every wound, LTS fluorescence was used to detect the wound-retention rate of silver particles. Wound-infection rates were calculated and analyzed with the Kaplan-Meier method. The healing of wounds was also observed
