a tough 2016 for the US Postal Service (USPS),
but its government-as-a-service model, its media-marketing prowess, its inexpensive services, and its unique place within the US culture make it a good bet for investors, even as it continues to struggle to its 10th straight quarterly loss, albeit at less than one percent. USPS is a government-funded monopoly, which means its costs are fixed. Its revenue comes from postage charges on mailings, and from fees for its services, such as package delivery. USPS also sets up the national distribution systems for shipping and collecting packages. Some of the company's costs are a function of its fixed business, such as its operating, distribution, and transportation costs; others are fixed, such as the bond and interest payments on its debt. USPS lost $5.6 billion in the fiscal year that ended in September, on net, or $13.5 million per day. The number of mail pieces processed fell by 4.7 billion, 5 percent, and the number of packages processed dropped by 1.4 billion, 5 percent. The net loss for fiscal 2016 was 21 percent higher than the $4.3 billion net loss in 2015. The company's bond and interest payments increased by 3.7 percent, or $516 million, to $3.11 billion during fiscal 2016.

“USPS faces intense competitive pressures.
