"Each stage of the game is broken up into four parts, and a bit of tricky AI will stop you if you get stuck. Some can prove... A very classy looking game. It's all about evading, dashing and just plain whacking your opponent. If you didn't play these things in your childhood, then never fear, that's pretty much it. I use the words "played these things in my childhood" as I've never seen this demo or the full game. I'm told it's brilliant, but having never seen or played it, and only this one demo, cannot really judge. So here's my review. Graphics: The graphics are good, but not stunning. You'll see what you want to see if you're looking for something spectacular. Once you've set foot on the ground, the effect and form of your opponent will become more apparent. The backgrounds are generally well presented, but you'll need to go to a high... "Flem is a classic platformer about dodging, rolling and dodging again. A swift kick can mean the difference between playing and dying, and you'll need to practice your timing before this becomes a habit." "Flem is a game based around rolling and dodging, all while collecting power-ups in order to keep up. Play a long enough session and the game's momentum will catch you up." "Flem is a great homage to the classic jump 'n' run platformers we all grew up with. The gameplay is straight forward, simple even, and it won't take long for you to memorize the flow of the levels. The controls are easy to pick up, and with one touch of a button, you'll be leaping over or dodging a spike trap or getting the jump on your opponent." "Flem is a simple platformer, but also one of the prettiest. The charm of the original is here, with modernized gameplay mechanics and a colorful look that shows the goings on with a color gradient like TV screens from the past." "Flem is a fun, old-school platformer. But in this day and age of quick play days and twitch-based games, Flem takes a unique approach to take all the anticipation and adrenaline out of the equation." "In a jam-packed period of games this week,
