Whole Foods Market Inc. announced Wednesday it is buying the closed Nestle factory in East Aurora, north of Buffalo. Nestle is shutting down the plant that had long manufactured McNeil Consumer, Monster Brand and Young Farms tabletop butter sticks. The announcement is the latest bit of industry news as food and beverage companies wrestle with cuts in grocery store and restaurant food service amid high production costs and weak consumer demand. Separately, PepsiCo Inc. has agreed to purchase Odwalla Inc. for $15.4 billion, a move that could expand Pepsi's reach into the natural and organic food and beverage market. An 18,000-square-foot building in East Aurora, where 300 employees will be displaced, has been on the market since at least March, when Whole Foods issued a request for proposals for the facility. Whole Foods' General Manager of Public Affairs and Communications said Wednesday that the company doesn't comment on market-specific plans, but said the facility was attractive to the company because of the number of lines and views it offered. Whole Foods spokesman Kory Abrams said the company purchased the facility and recently signed a lease with a coffee shop to begin operating it as a commercial kitchen. Whole Foods hasn't announced its plans for the facility yet, but Abrams said it's likely the company will sell its restaurant and deli portions of the operation and expand its coffee business there. "We're looking at more of a foodservice-type use of the space and a location within a radius of two miles from the proposed HCA hospital in West Seneca," Abrams said. "We're looking at a use of the space in addition to Whole Foods." Whole Foods, which has 23 grocery stores in the Buffalo area and plans to open a store at 1180 Summer Dr. in West Seneca, closed
