Google buys Motorola, moves search up to mobile - tylerkoh ===== maaaats > _"Motorola's unique patents are a valuable asset for Google," said Motorola > CEO Dennis Woodside. "These patents will allow us to provide our OEM > customers with a better user experience and protect Google's investment in > Android."_ So only Google is willing to "provide its OEM customers with a better user experience". I never understood why there's a patent war with Android, and then Google says they're not interested. ~~~ kumarm Google needs to understand that they need more than just hardware patents. They need software patents. ~~~ maaaats I don't see how that follows. They have plenty of those. ~~~ kumarm I would agree that they don't need Software patents because they have a monopoly, but they need software patents for protecting their interests on Android. Google does not want to leave Android vulnerable in a long run. ----- SquareWheel Motorola has been no stranger to Google patents, and they did nothing useful with the Motorola brand. This move is akin to Qualcomm getting an acquisition bill from Microsoft. ~~~ coredog64 Motorola's big selling point is their patents. You're reading too much into the acquisition. ~~~ SquareWheel If so, then why did they wait so long before announcing the deal? [
