Do you know some of the police officer jokes? Do you? Let's get some stupid little police jokes out there. Here's a very famous police joke. Did you know it? It goes like this - "A farmer got sick, so his friends decided to hire a policeman for $50 to stay in the house and watch out for the thieves. So the policeman does his job of watching out. After a few hours, the farmer is asleep. So he wakes up, gets dressed, and goes outside. He checks the barn and house - no thieves are there. But he does see a big hole in the fence. He goes back in the house, and says to the policeman - "Officer, there's a thief out there in the hole in the fence." So the policeman goes and sits in the hole, and checks it out. He gets back in the house and says to the farmer - "I've got to go back out there - there's a thief in the hole in the fence." The farmer gets so mad that he goes and gets a shotgun, and he says to the policeman - "Officer, go out there and get that thief." So the policeman goes out, and he starts chasing the thief.

Finally, he catches the thief and grabs him. And the thief turns around and looks at the policeman, and says - "Excuse me. This was your job." You tell it right? So, let's just hear a police officer joke from the radio - and it's a good one. I know it's a good one. This is a perfect time of night to ask about a police car. This is a perfect question. I'm glad that you asked about a police car. Now, if you were on a residential street, you might be able to see a police car. But you wouldn't be able to see a police car from a motel parking lot. So, why is a police car different from a regular car? A police car has a spotlight. A spotlight shines in a police car. It's a spotlight with a bright light. And it helps to shine in a dark parking lot. A flashlight is not the same thing as a spotlight - a flashlight is dimmer. You can see a person with a flashlight. A police officer with a flashlight is able to see a person in a lighted area. A spotlight is not a flashlight. It's a spotlight. You don't need to shine a flashlight in a police car.

Amazon.Heat, hydration, and exercise induced physiological adaptation in the cat. The responses to heat were studied in the cat. The experiment began with a control session (C), and followed a two-week (H) hydration period of either hypohydration (H-D) or euhydration (C-D). At the beginning of each week, the animals were placed in a climatic chamber (C, 2 h at 25 degrees C; H, 3 h at 38 degrees C; D, 40 h at 20 degrees C) during 8 h. After this observation period, the cats were housed at 20 degrees C, a net of 2 degrees C less than the C. The experiment ended with a second control session (C-L). A similar experiment was performed in a second group of animals (C-H) in which a resting rate of heat production (HP) was calculated during 8 h at 32 degrees C after 3 h on a treadmill (resting at 0.5 km.h⁻¹). The results indicate that in hypohydrated cats (H-D) the resting rate of HP was depressed at 32 degrees C. However, when these cats were euhydrated, an increase in resting rate of HP (9%) was observed. This increase in resting rate of HP was evidenced even when resting was achieved at 6 degrees C less than in the C. New York Times Co. chairman Arthur Sulzberger has pledged to resolve questions about how the company will handle subscriptions, ad rates and its website in an attempt to address widespread anger that the paper has priced itself out of the marketplace. In a letter addressed to readers of The Times, Sulzberger said the company plans to reverse course on its price increases and add more content to make The Times appealing and competitive. Sulzberger acknowledged that the company's "introductory advertising rate is substantially higher than many leading national newspapers" and vowed to offer three plans with subscription options. He also announced that The Times plans to work with a new "advisory council" of newspapers and industry experts "to develop plans and best practices in pricing, subscriptions, mobile and digital advertising." "I am determined that we will produce more content, while still offering the superior editorial and economical benefits that our readers expect

new experimental concepts for light detection in biology.

Photoluminescence-based sensing techniques have proven valuable for the characterization of the chemical nature of the surface of biological cells. The goal of this perspective is to summarize the current status of this technique in the context of the rapidly developing field of single-molecule spectroscopy. Many different experimental concepts have been developed in recent years to overcome the inherently low signal-to-noise characteristics of single-molecule fluorescence. We discuss two experimental schemes that rely on the photophysical principles of down-conversion and resonance energy transfer. These techniques offer a sensitivity up to two orders of magnitude higher than the standard approaches based on the acquisition of fluorescence intensity data, and have successfully been applied to the measurement of single-molecule fluorescence from a variety of biological systems. # Contributing We're excited for the future of Linkerd, and are looking forward to hear your ideas,
