What's New In?

Melania Trump has a big problem. It's the husband. It's President Trump. Melania Trump told the New York Times' Maureen Dowd that she isn't his trophy wife. "She doesn't consider herself his trophy wife," a source familiar with her thinking said. In fact, in Dowd's conversation with the first lady, the first lady told Dowd that Melania isn't allowed to criticize her husband. Melania also reportedly told Dowd that she doesn't consider herself the "first lady." Melania Trump and the "first lady" moniker. Look, no one disputes that Melania is a good public speaker, a lady of great beauty, elegance and class. But at this point, the attention to all that might be overkill, given the global context. In a way, Melania has made herself politically irrelevant. And also irrelevant when it comes to her husband. She's so irrelevant that her own husband said in an interview that he doesn't want her to speak out against him. One of the reasons we know Trump doesn't want his wife to speak out against him is that he's known to stick up for her. If it's a good thing for Melania to speak out, Trump will go out of his way to make it happen. And the fact is that Melania Trump has spoken out on multiple occasions to various publications and television shows. She says she isn't a fan of her husband's racist and hateful rhetoric and that she doesn't approve of him mocking a journalist with a disabled reporter. She's not a fan of Trump's climate of fear, racism and hatred. On this, Trump is wrong. Both Trump and Melania have made their imprints on the country during this election cycle. Trump is the GOP nominee, but Melania has become known as the ultimate anti-Hillary Clinton woman. Melania Trump is on display every day in a most unlikely way. I truly believe that Melania Trump has been using her 12-minute speech at the Republican National Convention as a platform to speak out. She told The Washington Post's Jenna Johnson: "We are both parents of children with special needs.... We are both mothers. That's probably the common ground that most Americans have
