A cost effective application to extract articles from the Biliário Complementar de Medicamentos website for MEDLINE-indexed journals. Latin American and Caribbean Journal of Nephrology is a Latin American and Caribbean edition of the journal Nephrology Dialysis Transplantation. We developed a web application that automatically extracts articles from a selected electronic bibliography using the CrossMarker® Extraction Software (CXS) with a neurocognitive algorithm and MEDLINE, and a protocol to extract information from a CXS server to build a software solution that can automatically extract information from Biliário Complementar de Medicamentos (BCM), a website that provided us with most of the data we used. We retrospectively reviewed articles between January 2010 and December 2011 as indicated in the website. We analyzed the cost of developing the application, the website's features, the performance of our application and its software solution to extract information and the cost of those extracted information to build our software solution. The costs were compared with the commercial extraction solution for MEDLINE available online. The application is a cost-effective solution, although we needed a 36-h period to extract all the articles, e79caf774b
