I was trying to make a column so that each time there is a new record, a new column would be added. If I look at the example, there is a sample of what I want. A: You can find the number of records by using the Dcount or group by function. For a single column you would do something like this: -- If this is an imported data-set - you may need to convert date format -- Columns need to be named to refer to column elements select ( select count(*) from ( select * from table_name where date = '01-09-2019') ) as dates_in_month You will then create a column to place this into. It might be possible to do it in an existing column by using this logic: -- this is an example of putting this column value into an existing column update Table Name set [Column Name] = ( select
