railroad did a cross-country run between New York and San Francisco. But what really matters is that we are now even closer to securing the means to get from the West Coast to the East Coast without the need for ships or planes. The idea was not totally ground breaking. Railroads have been a fixture of our landscape since before the Civil War. But the fact that it was a private business entity, rather than a government agency like the Interstate Commerce Commission, was an important distinction. The business model of the railroad entrepreneur was to charge a fee for the passage of passengers and freight, and make money, it was that simple. It was a legal gold mine. As the first railroad companies learned, they could charge huge amounts of money, even more than the mail contracts to haul mail from town to town. At one point, mail was quoted at nearly a tenth of the price of railroad travel. The potential revenues were obvious, and they multiplied over time. But the real appeal of the private railroad was that there were no government regulations. This idea was the brainchild of the great railroad entrepreneur Collis Potter Huntington.

Huntington was a wealthy businessman who bought land and laid down telegraph and telephone lines in the 1890s. He became a governor of the railway network and envisioned the new cross-country railroad. The first steel train left New York's Grand Central Station on July 2, 1904, and the Pacific Electric Railway (PE) also became the first modern passenger railroad. Thirty years later, after the PE went bankrupt, the Southern Pacific built its own railroad to San Francisco. The idea was old but soon to become a viable commercial enterprise. Charles Hopkins Warren of the Brown University Law School was appointed the first chairman of the PE. Warren was a man on a mission to create a “railroad in the sky”

Nicky Clarke
Nicholas Anthony
Michael Clarke (born 17 July 1949), best known as Nicky Clarke, is a retired British Stock Car racing driver from Whitley Bay, England. He had a successful career in both saloon and sprint racing, running in over 500 races with more than 100 top-ten finishes. Career Clarke is best known for his successful championship-winning career with the Rothmans Sports Car Cup. He first appeared at Brands Hatch in 1978, driving a Fabergé-Ford in the 1.8 L formula. He drove for Rothmans Racing from 1979 to 1983, which would prove to be his most successful season. In 1980, he won four races in the Formula Vauxhall Lotus Cup, a championship over three classes of competition, scoring three wins. He also competed in the 1980 Rothmans Twelve

Benson & Hedges
Hour race, which he won.
He finished third in the Formula Ford 1000 Championship which he entered in January of the same year. In 1981, he switched to the BP Masters series (which would be replaced by the Benson & Hedges
Masters later that year).

He ran two rounds in the Masters, but both times suffered mechanical failures. In 1982, he took the first of two pole positions that would win him the Rothmans Sports Car Cup championship. He also ran the season in a Formula Ford, finishing third in the British Formula Ford Championship. The season included a second place in the Masters, and a win at Oulton Park. He also drove at Brands Hatch, Westbury, Silverstone and Oulton Park as a guest driver. In 1983, he switched to the rival Formula Vauxhall Lotus Cup, and again began to win a series of races, winning the championship (again over two classes). He also won the Rothmans Masters, an event he would win three more times. After a successful championship campaign
