Abnormal platelet function has been postulated as a risk factor in the pathogenesis of cardiovascular disease. The platelet alpha2beta1 integrin is one of the major platelet membrane receptors, which interacts with laminin and other extracellular matrix components. Interaction between the subunit beta3 and extracellular matrix of non-platelet cells, such as endothelium, initiates intracellular signals involved in various cellular processes. Thrombin activates its proteolytic activity that leads to the conversion of alphaIIbbeta3 from inactive to active conformation and increased affinity to laminin, which may contribute to the platelet adhesion and aggregation in the blood vessel wall. In this study we report that ex vivo platelets from the hypertensive patients express elevated levels of platelet beta3-integrin and show that thrombin stimulates beta3-integrin expression and platelet aggregation in these patients' platelets. In contrast, alpha2beta1 and alphaIIbbeta

As is mentioned here on History SE, after the defeat of Hannibal, the Romans had a choice to either continue their invasion of Italy or invade the Iberian Peninsula, against an opponent that was much weaker than Hannibal. From Wikipedia: They could have captured one of the most important cities of Carthage itself and used it as a base for further operations into Italy and Africa. Why did they not do this? A: They could have captured one of the most important cities of Carthage itself and used it as a base for further operations into Italy and Africa When the Romans invaded Carthage in 209 BC they destroyed their fleet by prodding it with their fleet's oars and in 218 BC Carthage was conquered by their Roman allies, who did not wish to control Carthage as their enemies did. Carthage was not razed, no enemies were killed, so it was left intact (but not under Roman rule). Later Hannibal's forces subdued Carthage and occupied it in 146 BC but as usual once they were ousted from there the city was left intact. For a lot more on this see Iberia, Invasions of Carthage, Hannibal, Rome and the Second Punic War. The Carthaginian army on the other hand was organized as a mobile field army with as many as 40-60 legions, and it contained formidable siege machinery.
