Kyle Turley will miss the first six weeks of the regular season for the St. Louis Rams after being fined $25,000 for his late hit on Miami Dolphins receiver Reggie Bush that led to a leg injury to cornerback Aqib Talib, according to multiple reports. Turley, who has been suspended once for violating the league's personal conduct policy, was fined for hitting the veteran Bush during a punt return in the second half of last Sunday's game at Miami. Talib, a teammate of Bush's, left the game with a broken leg. "He's a dirty player," Dolphins linebacker Karlos Dansby said of Turley. "You've just got to keep doing what you're doing, man. "Just play football. He's a dirty player. I don't like it, I wish he would have his ugly face somewhere else. But I guess it's his opinion, so he's the GM and the commissioner, I guess he can make that decision." Turley was off-base in the hit, saying it was nothing more than a throw to the ground. "Bush

Time course of perfusion imaging in laser speckle contrast analysis: analysis of the non-flow component. Laser speckle contrast imaging (LSCI) generates a contrast signal that is inversely proportional to the movement of the scattering particles back into the tissue. It is commonly believed that the signal is generated by the movement of scattering particles with a constant velocity. In this study, we attempt to separate the flow and non-flow components of the LSCI signal, to determine the time course of their changes during and after peripheral vascular occlusion. Ten rats were anesthetized, and a segmental occlusion was performed on the left hindlimb by clamping the femoral artery. Two animals were sacrificed after 10 min of femoral artery occlusion, and three animals were sacrificed at

1, 3, 5 and 7 days after the femoral artery occlusion. For each animal, a series of images were obtained after intravenous injection of a laser speckle contrast agent in 1-min intervals. The signal-to-noise (S/N) ratio was calculated for each image. The non-flow component of the contrast signal, in the form of local scatter, was quantified from the images that were obtained after the signal has decayed to a steady-state level. LSCI signals decay exponentially with a half-time of approx. 80 s. On each image of a series, a background signal was calculated and was subtracted from the original image. The decay of the contrast signal in the subtracted images followed a biexponential function. The contribution of local scatter to the contrast signal, in the form of local intensity, decreased with time in the proximal region of the hindlimb. The time constant of this decay (16 s) was similar to the half-time of decay of the contrast signal. In the distal region, the local intensity decreased monotonically with time. The relative contribution of the non-flow component to the contrast signal in the distal region decreased from 0.5 to approx. 0.25 at each time point. The faster decay of the signal in the proximal hindlimb indicated the presence of microcirculatory resistance in the hindlimb that could be caused by the hind
