Users of social networks can provide updates about a current status of themselves or the community via the social networks. User updates via the social networks typically include any information about the user's current activities and may not include information about the user's current status or events in the user's life. Additionally, users of the social networks have no control over the information that is shared about themselves and other users of the social networks. Consequently, a user's social network updates may include a great amount of information about the user's current activities and updates about the user's life. For example, a user's social network updates may include a chronological list of the user's most recent actions, photographs of the user, and links to new content that the user has accessed.# [1502. sum total of each digit 0cc13bf012

I need to send some data to a device and I only need to do so when the device is not connected to the computer. I currently have a system sending data periodically using a python script. Is there an alternative where I could use python to communicate with the device so that it could detect the device is disconnected and retry the sending of the data? Thanks! A: Keep track of the device's physical address. If you do not know it, you can lookup the MAC address with the ADDRESS command on your serial console or terminal. If you have already determined its address, send a few bytes of data to it to let it know you are connected. That is true even if the physical connection with the device is lost.
