Portal 2 is available today for $50, and it's bringing some really cool and fresh ideas and innovations to the PC gaming world. I've been playing the game for a couple of days, and I got a chance to sit down with the developers at Valve on the new and interesting ideas behind Portal 2's design. The first thing I should note is that Portal 2's controls are second to none. People who have played Portal 1 will tell you that this sequel exceeds their expectations, especially in light of its outlandish puzzle-based design. The finger-controlled gloved hand of Chell is back in Portal 2, and this second sequel features a completely unprecedented and innovative control scheme. (The Big Head that controls the portals is designed to be operated by a team, but thankfully, Chell is the lone player in the end.) Steam users who pre-order Portal 2 for $45 will have Portal 2 plus all the in-game goodies, such as the Chell's Companion Pod, as well as the Portal Gun, the Glove of Resistance, the Gratch Costume, and the Chief Engineer Attaché. Anyone who purchases Portal 2 for the first time in the store will receive Portal 2, the Pod, the Glove, and the Loadout will be available in the store for PC owners later in the summer. Portal 2 comes packaged with five Steam Achievements. Check out our review of Portal 2 here at GameZone to see what's behind the design of the game. This system has been developed as a model for studying the regulation of entry into and exit from the cell cycle, and an understanding of the specific regulatory mechanisms involved is likely to be useful in understanding the regulation of normal cell division, as well as the regulation of human neoplastic cell growth. The experimental system in the proposed research will first use the micromolar range of alpha-amanitin which completely inhibits ribonucleic acid (RNA) synthesis in normal human fibroblasts to establish the maximal concentration of alpha-amanitin under which cells can remain in S phase. The second system will use synchronized cells to test whether alpha-amanitin

An evaluation of a pediatric hospitalist program. Developing and implementing pediatric hospitalist programs are complex undertakings. We conducted a prospective study to assess the impact of a pediatric hospitalist program on patient, physician, and hospitalization data. We measured patients' satisfaction with their hospitalization, physician satisfaction, the number of hospitalists and residents available for consultation, and hospital length of stay using chart audits and a survey of physicians and parents/guardians of patients. We compared the results with data from a similar period at our children's hospital before the implementation of a pediatric hospitalist program. Between January 2007 and June 2009, 10 of our 11 hospitalists were attending hospitalists with a combined total of 421 pediatric admissions, including 41 admissions to the pediatric intensive care unit. Between January 2006 and September 2007, our pediatricians provided inpatient pediatric consultation to 110 of 128 nonhospitalist pediatric admissions. The majority of pediatric admissions to our general hospital (65%) were discharged on the same day as admission, increasing to 82% after the implementation of the pediatric hospitalist program. The percentage of pediatric admissions requiring narcotics decreased from 73% to 50% and length of stay decreased from 1.2 to 1.0 days. The percentage of admission in the pediatric intensive care unit for cardiopulmonary arrests decreased from 29% to 15%. The pediatric hospitalist program was successful in significantly improving the care of patients in our pediatric hospital, minimizing the use of narcotics, reducing hospital length of stay, and decreasing the percentage of children requiring mechanical ventilation.Q: How to create a full width image with CSS? We have an image (that we want to be displayed in our application. The image is to be full width, but flexible vertically (should be just as tall as the browser window) Obviously can't be done with any CSS media query, so I'm using the width in %, to say in the middle of the browser window. The problem is the image is too tall for most browsers. And when you resize the browser window the image drops down the height, so you have to scroll to get to the bottom. So I'm trying to figure out what is best practise with CSS so we can get the following in the code. NOTE: I'll be using the following code for two reasons: I want to learn more about best practise, especially when it comes to dealing with width and
