Crack cocaine is made from cocaine mixed with a water solution of citric acid. This chemical reaction breaks down the cocaine and produces a crystalline base called "freebase" or "crack" base. The antidote to crack is naloxone, also known by its brand name, Narcan. Narcan is a synthetic opioid made from the opiate antibody found in the nesc, an effective antidote to morphine. Crack cocaine is different from other forms of cocaine, because of the quick effects that it produces. If you take crack, you get high, very high, at the same time as the cocaine molecules are breaking down into the base in your blood. This is why there isn't any real "hangover". The crystalline crack is less pure than normal cocaine, and is more often smoked rather than snorted, but it usually has the same high. The main way to measure the purity of cocaine is by looking at its price. Even though crack isn't pure, it is less expensive than other forms of cocaine, so dealers often promote it as a cheaper, safer choice. Along with the low purity, crack dealers also take extra steps to maximize the profits. This is why there are fewer pure forms of crack available. Crack costs more per dose because of
