Information about human pathogenic viruses is necessary for understanding pathogenesis, producing successful vaccines, and ultimately treating the disease. This information has become increasingly valuable in the post-genomic era, where detailed knowledge of individual genomes is one of the most powerful research tools available to investigators. Our research will result in a comprehensive database of all known viral genomes, both of important human and animal pathogens, and newly discovered viral sequences. The database is available to the public via the Internet at [www.virus.org](Here are some of the highlights of the current statistics of [www.virus.org](• \>9,000 complete viral genome sequences are available for a diverse set of viruses from the families Herpesviridae, Polyomaviridae, Papillomaviridae, Flaviviridae, Poxviridae, Retroviridae, Alphaviridae, Rhabdoviridae, Togaviridae, Paramyxoviridae, Coronaviridae, and Retroviridae, in addition to complete genome sequences from some of the emerging viruses found in recent years. • From the Alphaviridae family, several genomes have been recently released from virus isolates collected in both the New World and Old World, including [org](• Approximately 200 human (and some animal) viral genome sequences have been added to the collection since the last update. • An average of two genomes per week are being added to the database. The current release of [www.virus.org] is an important resource for all researchers who deal with viruses. It is a dynamic database that will be regularly updated. There are regular check-in sessions on the website, where bugs are detected and corrected immediately. Users are invited to submit new sequences or updates, and to suggest different features that should be added to the 6d1f23a050
