MOSCOW -- The Russian military says its airstrikes have destroyed 25 enemy military installations in Syria, including facilities with stores of chemical weapons, artillery systems, and ammunition depots. The Defense Ministry says the strikes, launched at the request of the Syrian government, were aimed at "providing support to the counterterrorist operation carried out by Syrian government troops" on the country's territory. The ministry says the Russian strikes destroyed 25 enemy military installations, including storage depots with chemical weapons, large-caliber artillery systems, anti-aircraft missile batteries and command posts. The attack followed a suspected chemical attack by the Syrian government on the Syrian town of Douma on April 7. Syria says it was carried out by rebels, who the government has blamed for a previous chemical attack on Khan Sheikhoun near Damascus in April. Greece's parliament has passed an austerity bill that will allow it to receive the next batch of IMF bailout funds but a portion of the measure will be suspended until June 30, EU sources said on Monday. Members of Greece's parliament, many opposed to the strict measures and in attendance for a marathon session in Athens in an attempt to prevent it, cheered their victory and the 300-year-old nation emerged with a budget for 2013-14. Greece was given a renewed loan of 11.5 billion euros ($15.1 billion) in May after EU leaders agreed on a stringent bailout package that will avert bankruptcy and leave Greece with limited debt repayment for three years. The parliament's final approval of the austerity package comes after a 36-hour-long debate that was staged amid violence. "The European leaders' stance... it's a shame that our country is not free. It's a shame that our people are not free," the country's junior finance minister, Marilisa Xenogiannakopoulou, told Al Jazeera. Greece's parliament on Sunday took just over five hours to vote for the austerity legislation, a decision that shocked the Athens stock market and its investors. "The bill was passed with a huge majority of 236 and the level of 316 votes for it is massive," said parliament member Christos Hoti, Al Jazeera's Athens correspondent. "There are opposition parties that have been absent, even the German party had to return to the parliament c6a93da74d
